The Mitch Jacobs Band-Gulf Coast Jamboree

Mitch Jacobs is part Johnny Cash toughness, part Roy Orbison vulnerability, part Marty Robbins country crooning, and a heaping helping of Mitch Jacobs Texas bravado baritone. And speaking of Robbins, Mitch's original tune, "Rosa's Cantina," is a respectful sequel to Marty's story of such a place in his classic track, "El Paso." This is the jukebox world in which Mitch Jacobs' music resides. Each of the four tracks on his latest EP recalls a time when folks like Johnny, Roy, and Marty kept jukeboxes blaring, but make no mistake, this is a record for 2011. Al Staehely's topical original, the big and brassy "Who's Gonna Bail Me Out," wonders aloud when the rest of us get the Goldman Sachs treatment in these tough economic times, while Bill Browder's "Lonely Tonight" provides Mitch a soaring setting for singing a heartfelt ballad. A tear-in-my-beer barroom jukebox is where it belongs. The unforgettable rocker "What's So Hard About Love," co-written by label mates Freddie Steady Krc and Cam King, gets the full Tex-Mex treatment.

This latest release from Mitch and the guys is just like a Mitch Jacobs Band live show. It's a Gulf Coast Jamboree.
